

Dear Friends,

This season has been busy at the museum. We've had a full slate of programs and fantastic exhibitions. But it's not over yet! We still have a few more months of fun-filled activities and fascinating artwork to share with you.

You may have heard about the Confluence Project, for which Maya Lin, renowned architect of the Vietnam Veteran's Memorial in Washington, D.C., was commissioned to create an interpretative artwork at seven sites along the Columbia River. This project has unfolded over several years and involved hundreds, if not thousands, of area residents. We are thrilled to bring a small portion of this project to Maryhill—digital storytelling, ceramic masks, poetry, mosaics, watercolor paintings, clay sculptures, collaged story circles, painted wood salmon, and tule weavings created by local students, and inspired by traditions of the Columbia River. Gifts from Our Ancestors will be on view in the museum's M.J. Murdock Charitable Trust Education Center from September 7 - October 3, 2013. On Saturday, September 7, we'll celebrate with the young artists. A Family Fun program that day will feature traditional artist Foster Kalama. Check our calendar for all the details.

We are also looking forward to our fall special exhibition Windows to Heaven: Treasures from the Museum of Russian Icons. These are exquisite pieces that demand close inspection. We hope you can make time to take a look.

See you soon!

Romanian Consul General from Los Angeles, Eugen Chivu, looks at Romanian textiles that are part of the collections at Maryhill. Chivu visited Maryhill in June to see the museum's collections relating to Queen Marie of Romania. He was invited and accompanied by Maryhill Trustee Michael Oros, who is President of the Romanian American Society.

WINDOWS TO HEAVEN: TREASURES FROM THE MUSEUM OF RUSSIAN ICONS

This fall Maryhill is looking forward to hosting the exhibition Windows to Heaven: Treasures from the Museum of Russian Icons featuring a group of historically significant icons dating from 1590 to the present. The exhibition comes to the museum from the collection of the The Museum of Russian Icons in Clinton, Massachusetts—the only museum in the United States dedicated exclusively to Russian icons.

Visitors to the exhibition will be able to explore the historical context in which the icons were created, the definition of an icon, and how icons are made—both in the past and today. The exhibition also takes a look at Russian history and culture, and the systematic destruction of holy images, or the practice of iconoclasm.

Icons are sanctified images that use a distinctive aesthetic criteria and artistic language. The subject matter may be a holy person, a scene from holy writings or a combination of both. There is a rich history and elaborate religious symbolism associated with Russian icons. Since the vast majority of Russian churches were made of wood, not stone, mosaics and frescoes were not part of the tradition. Icons played an important role in prayer and were called upon to depict everything needed for an Orthodox church.

The composition of both portrait and narrative icons, as well as how the human form and other elements are depicted, follows time-honored conventions. Traditionally, icons are painted in egg tempera on wooden panels. Portions of the painting are sometimes embellished with a metal covering, or riza, that can be decorated with gemstones or filigree. Artists use existing icons or pattern books as guides and individual artists are seldom recognized.

Windows to Heaven: Treasures from the Museum of Russian Icons beautifully complements Maryhill Museum of Art's own collection of Russian icons, a portion of which is on permanent view. Much of Maryhill's Russian icon collection once belonged to Queen Marie of Romania. Queen Marie's mother was devoutly Russian Orthodox and, as a result, despite being raised as a Protestant herself, Marie retained a lifelong interest in the symbolism and ceremony associated with Orthodox icons.

Saint Elijah, c. 1870. Egg tempera on wood, 12" x 14".
Museum of Russian Icons, Clinton, MA

Explore the rich history and elaborate religious symbolism associated with painted icons during this hands-on workshop with Reverend Deacon Matthew Garrett. Deesis: St. John the Baptist—an icon that is included in the Windows to Heaven exhibit—is the prototype for the icon that participants will paint from start to finish during the workshop. No previous art experience is necessary.

Reverend Deacon Matthew Garrett is an accomplished icon painter whose work can be seen in many churches, including the Nativity of the Virgin Mary Orthodox Church in Monongahela, PA, St. George Antiochian Orthodox Church in Altoona, PA, Camp

Nazareth in Mercer, PA, and the St. Peter and Paul Chapel at the Antiochian Village in Ligonier, PA.

Cost: $400 members / $425 non-members. All supplies, lunch and snacks are included as well as daily admission to the museum. Icons will be written in acrylic on board. No previous art experience is necessary. Deposit of $200 is required. To register call 509.773.3733 or email education@maryhillmuseum.org.

Discount hotel rooms are available at the Celilo Inn and the Comfort Inn in The Dalles, Oregon.
